

Movie review : Fury

The movie is realistic, very violent and moving. The movie is entitled Fury by David Ayer. Fury is an American war film. The movie stars Brad Pitt (Don in the movie), Logan Lerman (Norman), Shia LaBeouf (Boyd), Michael Peña (Trini) and Jon Bernthal (Grady). This film shows how the courage of the young soldiers appeared. The aim of the movie is to translate the history and particularly the 2nd World War. The movie exposes the horror of the war and the soldier's suffering.

After the death of the machine gunner of the crew, a new young soldier comes in the crew. That strongly worries the sergeant because he is afraid that his lack of experience exploits their survival.

Firstly, the movie shows us that the young soldier is not courageous and does not dare to kill. At the beginning, the soldier (Norman) is afraid to kill because he finds that horrible. A scene illustrates this lack of courage. When he is asked to pull the trigger on a German SS, he refuses. But the sergeant (Don) forces him and he pulls. Several soldiers died because of him. Norman doesn't see why they should be killed.

Secondly, the appearance of a hatred towards following a traumatism. His courage will come thanks to various events and his crew. An event will give a turning point in this history. Searching a house, Don and Norman discover a German woman, Irma and her cousin Emma. Norman loved Emma but the Nazis will launch a bomb on the house of Emma. Emma dies. And it's there that the hatred of Norman will arrive. Then, he will have to kill to save his life. He will become an excellent soldier thanks to his crew.

To finish, we see the final battle. They must keep a crossroads with a tank soldiers. They didn't move. Hundreds of German soldiers arrive. Norman must show his courage to save his crew. But it will be difficult because the German soldiers are very important and Don and his crew don't have many munitions to kill the German Nazis. But the courage of each one and their strategy will be effective. Norman identifies with Don because he considers him like a hero. Don is the best in his eyes. Only Norman survives this fatal battle.

To conclude, the movie shows that the war can make change a person. However, we can expect the arrival of a foreign army such as English or French army but it is the US military that fights. The movie showed us that the courage often comes from the hatred started by events. It's a realistic movie because it shows the realities of the war and what the soldiers undergo. It's very interesting.
