

Fury (2014)

Director: David AYER

Cast: Brad Pitt, Shia Labeouf, Logan Lerman, Michael Pena, Jon Bernthal

Genre: War, Drama, Action

Theme: The 2nd world war

“ Fury, masterful war film! ”

The plot focuses on five American soldiers who use tanks during the 2nd world war. We will follow their fight from town to town until they can not fight anymore. The story begins with a scene which presents the destruction of the battlefield in Germany. The film reaches a climax when despite losing their tanks they decided to continue fighting. It has a tragic ending with the death of nearly all main characters except the new recruit.

The story had powerful scenes. One of the most poignant scenes of the movie is when the main hero falls in love with a German woman and she dies by German bomb. The story is gripping but some scenes are quite predictable. The narrative is intelligently built but some fights are a little unrealistic.

The sound effects are rich and realistic.

The cast is excellent, every actor is absolutely remarkable. The performance of those actors is excellent! The most complex characters played are that of Norman and Don. Norman became a soldier while he had never killed before and Don is a sergeant who takes care of his soldiers like a family.

This film does not show the classic image of the serious uptight soldier. In this story each main character has an original personality. Their speech and unexpected reactions give lightness and humour to the situation.

Our five main characters were made into tragical heroes giving their life for their country and its values.

“Fury” is an American film which was made to show the incredible courage of the American soldiers fighting during the 2nd world war and the cruelty of the German soldiers even towards their own people.